SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1866.

OFFICIAL.

On the 14th of April, 1866, great affliction was brought upon the American people by the assassination of the lamented ABRAHAM LINCOLN, then President of the United States. The undersigned is therefore directed by the President to announce that, in commemoration of that event, the public offices will be closed to-morrow, the 14th instant.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Department of State, Washington, 14th April, 1866.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

IN MEMORIAM.

ONE year has passed since the nation was appalled by the intelligence of the assassination of ABRAHAM LINCOLN. The crushing grief—terror almost—of the first moments in which that horrible crime stood revealed before us, has passed away; but what true patriot will say that the loss to our country, in the death of that great and good man, was even then overestimated? In a great calamity the first impulse of the mind is to exaggerate. The mental retina is, for the moment, blinded by the sudden flash of misfortune. Time passes, and we see that things are not so bad as we at first thought them to be; compensating advantages reveal themselves and take of the keen edge of regret; we adapt ourselves to the new circumstances in which we are placed, and forget our griefs amid the cares of life.

Not so, however, in this case. As we look back at that great man—so simple, so wise, so benevolent, so considerate, so conscientious, so charitable, so faithful to the eternal verities, so full of confidence in the onward and upward progress of the human race, so patient with the impetuous and unreasonable, and yet so sympathetic with the poor and the oppressed—in a word, as we look back at ABRAHAM LINCOLN, as his character is more and more clearly revealing itself to the gaze of the world, and as we look around upon the present condition of our country, can we feel a less deep and poignant grief than we did one year ago at his sudden and tragic removal from our midst? On the contrary, did we then, in any just sense, comprehend the calamity that had befallen us? Where, as we look about us, can we behold any compensating advantages that have accrued to us from his death? Do we see them in the exasperated condition of our politics—in the hostile collisions between great co-ordinate branches of the Government—in the passionate discussions of momentous public questions, or in the gloom and uncertainty which gather about the future?

There was one element in ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S character which becomes more prominent as the facts of his life are more fully revealed, and that was his conscientious devotion to principle. He was tolerant of methods for reaching a desired end. He had no pride of opinion. He readily discarded a plan when he found that it did not work well. He left himself a wise choice of means. He often hesitated long and painfully before he was able to decide with himself what he ought to do. But when once he had made up his mind that right and justice and principle lay in a certain direction, he immediately set his face Zionward, and there was after that no looking behind. He took no backward steps. He did not enunciate a principle to-day to discard it to-morrow. He raised no false hopes. The word of promise with him was like the "sure word of prophecy," which could not be broken. Hence it was that the moral power of his character came to take such a hold upon the people—they trusted in him.

Time alone enables us to do justice to a great character. At the first our point of view is too close. We are absorbed in details and get no impression of the whole. But as time passes, and our mental vision gets a perspective, details sink into their proper subordination; the greater traits fall into natural harmony, and the complete character in its full and grand proportions stands before us. So will it be with our martyred Chief Magistrate. We are still too near to his times to do him justice or to fully appreciate his greatness. But we may be sure that as years and ages and even centuries roll on history will unfold few nobler or more attractive characters than that of the simple, wise, great, and good ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

How the Patriot Clymer Talked in 1864, and How He Acted.

THE Democratic press throughout the State has been sorely puzzled to know how to get over the ugly fact that Mr. HEISTER CLYMER was, during the whole war, a consistent and virulent Copperhead. In using the term Copperhead we apply it in its broadest and most comprehensive sense. He was an opposer of the war, a favorer of the Rebellion, a deadly enemy to all legislation tending to do justice to the soldier, and a bitter traducer of the Government and all who lent it their support. Now that his prophecies of the failure to subjugate the South have all miscarried, his friends have busied themselves to find some moment in his record when he said something which might be construed into friendship for our volunteers. After much exertion their efforts have been crowned with partial success. A speech has been exhumed in which he declared that the Democracy were the only true friends the soldiers had, and this forgotten oration is paraded in flaming letters under the caption of—

"TRUTH FROM THE RECORD OF 1864. 'SHODDY AGAINST THE PRIVATE SOLDIER.' 'CLYMER FOR THE SOLDIER.'"

That chaotic organ of the unwashed, the Philadelphia Age, announcing that the disunion press is full of lies," goes on to publish the whole of the speech, which as a campaign document is expected to make the soldiers support the "soldiers' friend." This patriotic oration was made in behalf of the following resolution introduced by Senator HOPKINS (Democrat). It reads:—

"Resolved, That the Committee on Federal Relations be instructed to bring in a joint resolution instructing our Senators and requesting our Representatives in Congress to vote for a law requiring the payment of non-commissioned officers and privates in the service of the United States in coin or its equivalent."

In favor of this resolution did the DEMOCRATS from Berks pour out his eloquence. The address is too long for us to republish. The speaker terms the veterans "that meritorious class of fellow-citizens," and speaks of them in terms which would delight their ears when they consider the source. After abusing our foreign ministers, who, the Senator declares, should receive no more than the private soldiers—after anathematizing the contractors, and declaring his disloyalty to any administration, he concludes with the startling declaration that he "will never be enslaved." Would that BOZZAIS could have heard that vow! He would have known that his soul was marching on.

And now let us look at the occasion for this advocacy of bettering the condition of the soldiers. The war looked desperate, the horizon of the national future was dark, the finances were disordered, and gold was selling at a premium of 250. The debt was increasing with frightful rapidity. Every day added a couple of millions of dollars to the load beneath which the nation was groaning. Retrenchment was the order of the day, and the utmost economy was found necessary. The popular faith in the stability of the national credit was almost shaken. At this critical moment the Democracy declared themselves in favor of paying the soldiers in gold. They who had been making political capital out of lack of funds, now demanded that the United States should go into the market and buy gold. The rise of coin would immediately result. The debt would increase with double rapidity. The national credit would be wrecked; instead of having gold, it would have neither specie nor greenbacks—instead of the soldiers getting an increase of pay, they would get no pay at all. The adoption by Congress of such a resolution as the Democracy now glory in favoring, would have been the signal for disunion, the failure of the war, the destruction of the nation. And that was why HEISTER CLYMER and his brother Democrats supported it. It was but another step in their consistent policy to secure the ruin of our land. And now they are seeking to make a virtue of an action conceived in treason and attempted in treachery and crime. The people and the soldiers see through the shallow pretense, and will not be deceived.

When a real opportunity was offered of serving the soldier, and putting trust in him by giving him the right of suffrage, how did we find Mr. HEISTER CLYMER voting then? Was it on the soldier's side? On the contrary, on every occasion he voted against extending to him the right of citizenship, and had he succeeded he would be now endeavoring to continue the disfranchisement, on the ground of not residing sufficiently long in the State. What he lavns and cringes to now, he would scorn and condemn, if he dared. We would advise our brother editors of the opposer to let the record of their candidate rest. It is of a kind that does not purify the air when it is disturbed. Let him continue to fight on his peace platform and Southern sympathy, and not seek to seduce soldiers by calling himself their friend, when it is evident that he always hated them because of their devotion to that Union which he ever held subservient to party victories.

Who's life in low estate began, and on a simple village green, He wears a wreath of bay and laurel, And boasts the honors of his name, And prides himself on his renown, Who makes by force his merit known, And lives to clutch the golden key, To move a wretched wretch from his door, And shape the whisper of the throne, And mold the fate of nations high, Becomes in 'or' one's crowning scope The pillar of a people's life, 'Tis such a life as a world's desire.

Such a life and such a character will go down to all time as the great and sacred possession of the American people. But there is more than the character of any one man in that great struggle through which we have passed. There were two scenes in the drama of the Revolution. One was the military scene with all its dash, with all its sufferings, losses, and tears; that scene was closing one year ago this night. Just as the curtain was lifting on the new and final scene, the restoration of peace, and liberty, and order, as the curtain was rising to show the new character, the spirit of rebellion and treason could not resist the desire to strike one blow, and to cause the chief character in the scene then closing to perish by the hand of assassination.

It was not the hand of one man that killed President Lincoln; it was the embodied spirit of treason and slavery concentrated into fearful hate that struck him down in that supreme power of the nation's joy.

There are times in the history of men and of nations when they seem to stand so closely by the yet which seems to burn from immortality, time from eternity, and man from man, that they can almost hear the beatings and feel the pulsations of the heart of God. Such a time have we passed through when two hundred and thirty thousand patriotic souls broke through the folds of that thin veil, and went up into the presence of God, and when at last immortal souls met and on the road work until it shall be completed. Following the lead of that great man, and reverently following the lead of God, let us remember that— "He has sounded forth the trumpet that shall never call retreat. He is sitting on the heights of heaven, his eye has seen the glory of the coming Kingdom, and he is sitting on the clouds, to answer him, 'Rejoice by his feet.' Rejoice by his feet. For God is marching on."

The motion was agreed to, and the House thereupon adjourned.

LATEST FROM WASHINGTON.

Our Special Despatches.

WASHINGTON, April 14. The work of removing the Union dead from the Virginia and Maryland battle-fields to the Great National Cemetery at Washington is a ready in progress, and some 1600 bodies have been placed there.

Paris Dismissed. The work of dismantling Forts Stanton, Carroll, Slocum, Totten, Stevens, Reno, and Sumner, for the defense of Washington, was completed yesterday, and the land turned over to the owners.

Records Lost. Dr. Spruce, of the post hospital at Richmond, Va., during the Rebellion, in answer to an inquiry from the War Department that the records of the Union dead buried near Richmond were destroyed in the great fire upon the evacuation of Richmond.

CONGRESS. WASHINGTON, April 14. The Senate was not in session today.

House of Representatives. In the House, on motion of Mr. Carlisle, the reading of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with, and Mr. Carlisle then said:—

To make a motion that the House do now adjourn. This day will be memorable as long as this nation shall endure, which, I trust, may be long, but that moment of recurred time when the names of the world's history shall be sealed up and placed before the Judge for His sentence. On this day, for all time to come, I doubt not the citizens of this republic will meet together, looking into each other's faces with solemn sadness as they recall the great event of this day in 1865—an event unparalleled in the history of nations, certainly unparalleled in our own.

I think it eminently proper that this Congress should put on its record to-day a resolution in memory of that event, the war with its wonderful events gave to history many distinguished names; it took the young men of the land and made them heroes; it made the old men patriots; and women became the nursing angels of the continent; but chief among all the great developments of the war were the armer and his of that great man whose life and death were the pivot of the world's history. He applied the principles in the language of one of England's poets as that

THRILLING ANNOUNCEMENT!

STEAM BOILERS!

Important and Reliable Arrangement to Remove Scale and Prevent its Formation.

ECONOMY IN FUEL. GREATER SAFETY IN BOILERS.

The AMERICAN ANTI-INCORUSTATOR COMPANY is prepared to remove scale from any and every description of steam boiler, and prevent the hard incrustation of scale from forming. By the use of the Anti-Incorustator the consumption of fuel is much reduced; the frequent stoppage of mills, manufactories, steamships, and locomotives, to clean boilers, dispensed with, and dangers from the starting and terrible effects of boiler explosions greatly lessened.

Experience has clearly demonstrated the utility of the Anti-Incorustator, and the certainty of its attaining the very desirable result above claimed for it.

Information relative to the Anti-Incorustator cheerfully given, personally or through correspondence, at the Company's Office.

No. 147 S. FOURTH Street, PHILADELPHIA.

Railroad men and manufacturers, read what has been accomplished by the Anti-Incorustator on the Pennsylvania Railroad. After a severe and thorough test, Mr. John P. Laird, the Superintendent of Motive Power and Machinery, and Edward H. Williams, Esq., the General Superintendent, state as follows:—

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD COMPANY, OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF MOTIVE POWER AND MACHINERY, ALTOONA, Pa., April 14, 1866.

H. J. Lombard, Esq.—Dear Sir:—I have this day examined engines 75 and 78, the Engines which were furnished with the Anti-Incorustator on the 19th of December last. On applying the instrument the flues were coated with scale over one-eighth of an inch in thickness. We have taken a flue out of each engine, and find the scale entirely removed, and the boiler perfectly clean. I have also taken a flue out of engine 80, of the same class, and employed in the same service and find a one-eighth of an inch of scale, and the inside of the boiler in condition similar to that of the other two engines previous to the application of the instrument.

I consider the fact as fully established that the Anti-Incorustator will not only prevent the accumulation of SCALE ON THE BOILER, BUT WILL REMOVE THAT ALREADY FORMED IN OLD BOILERS.

Very respectfully, JOHN P. LAIRD, Sup't. of P. &
